Pieter-Dirk Uys: The Echo of a Noise

His German Oma introduced him to Schnitzel und Pfefferkuchen, Max und Moritz and a little Berliner Schnautze. His Afrikaner Ouma warned him that the English were his arch-enemies, the Catholics were the anti-Christ and the Jews were all thieves! Helga Bassel, his Berlin-born mother, made him believe that dreams can come true. Hannes Uys, his Calvinist father, forced him to exchange the dreams for the hard realities of life. And now South African playwright, performer and satirist Pieter-Dirk Uys is in his mother's birth place Berlin, telling his unique story which could in so many ways reflect the experiences of his audience, as it has done in the sold-out South African seasons.

"The Echo of a Noise" is his personal story behind the stories. Born in Cape Town into a musical family with a Jewish mother and an Afrikaner father, with Mozart as his best friend, Pieter-Dirk Uys weaves his monologue from the fun and fear of growing up, through the stress and celebrations of young teenage discoveries, into the minefield of the years of apartheid where he fought that monster with "bittere Gelächter".
